BY N. W. LOSGINGTON. Yes, the year is growing old. And his eye is pale and bleared? Death, with freety hand and cold,

Sorely, struly! The leaves are falling, falling, Caw! caw! the rooks are calling,

The winds, like anthems, roll: They are chapting solemn musers. Singing, "Pray for this poor soul, Pray, pray ?" And the booled clouds, like friors, Tell their beads in drope of rain.

But their prayers are all in vain, There he stands in the foul weather. The foolish, fond Old Year, Crowned with wild flowers and beather.

Like weak, despised Lett.

A king, a king! Then comes the summer like day, Bids the old man rejoice! His poy! his last! O, the old man gray Loreth that ever soft voice. Gentle and low. To the erimson woods to suith,

To the voice gentle and low Of the soft air, like a daughter's breath Pray do not mack me so Two most lambels at most And now the sweet day is dead; Cutd in his arms it lies:

No stain from its breath is sprend Over the glassy skies, Then, ten, the Ott Year dieth, And the forests utter a smean, Like the voice of one who crieth

In the wilderness alone, Vex not his ghost! Then comes with an awiel roor. Gathering and sounding on, The sterm-wind from Labrador, The wind Euroelydon The storm-wind?

Howl? howl? and from the forest Sweep the red feaves away! Would, the size that then abborred. O Soul! could thus decay. And be swept away? For there shall come a mightler blast, There shall be a darker day; And the stars from heaven down-cast.

Like red leaves be sweet away?
